PALMER SAYS POST ENCOURAGES 'REDS'

Assistant Secretary of Labor Assailed by Attorney General At Hearing.

and was still spread. He declared that it was reaching into this country through the I. W. W. and other organizations, and that through the medium of at least three organizations, propaganda is reaching "hundreds of thousands of the workmen in this country."

The Attorney General named the Communists-Anarchists of the Federation of Russian Workers of the United States. They are helped, he said, by so-called "parlor bolsheviks" and other "misguided idealists."

Will Continue Campaign.

While expressing the view that the danger is not yet past, Palmer said he did not believe any revolution would ever succeed in this country.

He declared that the campaign must continue, and that it must be backed by a definite government policy. "I believe that it will be one of the principal privileges of our political parties in the next campaign to frame and assert such a policy, a duty as difficult, perhaps as it is imperative. It must aim at reforms more than at repressive measures but it must recognize the government's inherent right of self-protection," Palmer declared.

He declared "the vigorous enforcement of the law must be continued, and the law must be strengthened in order to punish the citizen for the offenses of which the penalty for an alien is deportation."

Many Are Criminals.

"Most of the individuals involved in this movement are aliens or foreign-born citizens," Palmer said. "There are some, however, of unquestionable American extraction."

"Some of the leaders are idealists with distorted minds, many even insane; many are professional agitators who are plainly self-seekers, and a large number are potential or actual criminals, whose baseness of character leads them to espouse the unrestrained and gross theories and tactics of these organizations."

Many of the so-called "liberals" and others who have defended Bolshevism, Palmer said, have hailed its advent, while "normal men have known it to be the most corrupt, most wickedly fatuous insurrection of mob ignorance in all history."

Tracing the spread of Bolshevist doctrine, Palmer said the I. W. W. has been Bolshevized from the start, and that "the direct connection under cover of the I. W. W. with other bodies of workmen in different parts of the country who engaged in the April strike is positively established."

by documents in the possession of the Department of Justice.

Palmer said that the various "out-law strikes" which have occurred in this country are in line with the pronounced policy of the Bolsheviki to retard production and lay a foundation of disorder and unrest.

Going into the details of the charges against him, made by the Assistant Secretary of Labor and others, Palmer cited the statement that the Department of Justice used "provocateur agents." Palmer declared that this statement is a "deliberate and unwarranted falsehood."

He denied that any of the department's agents has organized branches of the Communists or has engaged in similar activities. He admitted that they may have joined such organizations, in carrying out their duties, but defended this practice.

The Attorney General cited scores of cases, including the noted Martens case, in which he alleged undue interference by the Assistant Secretary of Labor, and he denied emphatically the various charges against the department and its agents.

The Attorney General declared that after the collapse of the steel strike a number of "the more radical men" who had been leaders in that strike and were of I. W. W. affiliations engaged in an endeavor to promote the railroad strike of April.

Lists of all railroad men who were members of the Communist Labor and Communist parties were sought and the names of all railroad men opposed to the present management of the brotherhoods were also collected, the Attorney General charged. Meetings were held in the Continental Hotel in New York and the Great Northern in Chicago, he said.

The Attorney General declared that the I. W. W. with John Grunewald brought about the strike of railroad shopmen to foster the one big union movement, and that even with Grunewald displaced as head of the so-called outlaw strikers "one Bidwell" is continuing the effort.

PERSHING AND FOCH OFTEN IN CLASHES

Yank Leader Insisted His Views Be Respected, Says French Writer.

the Americans. Marshal Foch was asked if he did not wish to change his plans in view of the gravity of the American casualties. The generalissimo replied he did not.

Believing the Franco-American offensive was not progressing satisfactorily, Marshal Foch sent Marshal Pétain to regulate the details. General Pershing immediately called upon Marshal Foch and informed him he wished to receive orders only from Foch himself. Like the other commanders of the allied armies in France.

The generalissimo acceded to General Pershing's wishes.

Protected Splitting Forces.

August 13, 1918, says Recouly, General Pershing notified Marshal Foch he could not adhere to the generalissimo's plan for the attack at St. Mihiel to be immediately followed by the offensive in the Argonne, since such a double campaign implied dispersion of American units. General Pershing contended he must abandon either the St. Mihiel assault or the Argonne attack. He declared it was for Marshal Foch to decide which should be given up, but in any event the United States army must not be split up, but must be used as a unit.

Marshal Foch replied that the Argonne attack must be carried out, even if the attack against the German salient at St. Mihiel was abandoned.

It was finally agreed that eight or ten American divisions should attack at St. Mihiel while the American army should be used as a unit in the offensive in the Argonne (north of Verdun), as General Pershing desired.

M. Recouly freely admits that the Americans on the Argonne front, with the French at their left, faced the most difficult task that confronted any of the allied armies in the final advance of the war because they were opposed to the pivot of German resistance.

M. Recouly recounted some of the obstacles before the Americans, but says that, even if the doughboys were unskilled in the science of warfare, they always desired to go ahead and were determined to advance against any odds.

Among those who will take part in the conference are D. W. Cooke, associate director of the Cunard Line; Robert W.
